I Love Heartsong

I love Heartsong when I need to escape from everyday trivia--when I need a "conversation" with someone besides my dog--when I need to get away from a crowd--when weariness makes me useless to do anything but read--when my joy needs to spill over into someone else's and theirs into mine--when the past seems so much more romantic than the present--when a character's conflict blots out mine--when I can't go to sleep until I find out the ending--when foreign lands come alive--when history becomes more meaningful--when a character's spiritual struggles reveal mine and God speaks to me.
